

Call for application n° ISTC-AdR-431-2024-RM

CALL FOR APPLICANTS FOR N° 2 “EARLY STAGE RESEARCHER” GRANT (ASSOCIATED TO A PhD POSITION) within the project “HORIZON-MSCA-2023-DN-01– Grant Agreement n. 101169131 for Marie Skłodowska-Curie Actions Doctoral Networks (MSCA DN) titled “Spatial Communication and Ageing across LAnguages” (Acronym “SCALA”) Prot. 282512 del 5/8/2024, and whose scientific manager for CNR-ISTC is dr. Olga Capirci; cod. prog. n. DUS.AD016.202, CUP B53C24004390006

THE DIRECTORANNOUNCES*Art. 1*Subject of the call

A public selection is announced, by qualifications and interview, for the awarding of n. 2 Grants for carrying out research activities at the Istituto di Scienze e Tecnologie della Cognizione of CNR (at the University of Firenze), under the scientific responsibility of dr. Olga Capirci within the project HORIZON-MSCA-2023-DN-01– Grant Agreement n. 101169131 for Marie Skłodowska-Curie Actions Doctoral Networks (MSCA DN) titled “Spatial Communication and Ageing across LAnguages” (Acronym “SCALA”), CUP B53C24004390006 for the following topics:

Topic 1 / DC2 “Spatial communication in Sign Languages in Typical Ageing”

This project will consider spatial communication in sign languages across the lifespan (up to old age), using a combination of linguistic and experimental approaches, focusing on arbitrary space (referential or syntactic) and motivated space (topographical or surrogate), involving the mapping of the positions of concrete referents onto the signed space. In this project, topological space, pronominalization, and spatial verbs will be systematically tested in the comprehension and production of Italian sign language, in order to trace for the first time how spatial language changes across the lifespan.

Data will also be collected on a range of linguistic and non-linguistic measures to assess predictors of spatial language performance in older adults in sign languages.

The fellow will benefit from training in theories of sign language development and in sign language video analysis. They will also receive training in advanced statistical analysis, training in Italian Sign Language, and in the transcription and analysis of Sign Language data.

Together, the eleven projects of the SCALA Project will provide the first comprehensive picture of spatial communication in typical and atypical ageing using cutting-edge methods from complementary disciplines. Fellows will benefit from training using techniques typically isolated to single disciplines, combined with a program of transferable skills that will prepare them for future employment.

Topic 2/ DC3 “Understanding the relative importance of pointing, eye gaze and language in object reference in spoken and sign languages in older adults”

This project will consider the relative importance of gesture, gaze, and speech in directing a conspecific's attention to objects in the environment, with a focus on comparing hearing and deaf people with and without sign language proficiency: hearing signers and non-signers, and deaf signers and non-signers (deaf people with cochlear implants) in understanding spatial cues as a function of these various deictic cues. There is preliminary work suggesting that verbal means of directing attention to regions of space (e.g. demonstratives) are less effective than gestural pointing and gaze direction, where pointing is the more decisive factor. However, nothing is known about the relative importance of these modalities in the context of hearing loss and whether or not people use a signed language. This project will examine the relative role of these “deictic cues” in people who vary in their hearing status and in their ability to produce and understand gestural, verbal, and sign language. The fellow will benefit from training in theories of sign language development and sign language video analysis. He or she will also receive training in advanced statistical analysis, training in Italian Sign Language, and transcription and analysis of sign language data.

Together, the eleven projects of the SCALA Project will provide the first comprehensive picture of spatial communication in typical and atypical aging using cutting-edge methods from complementary disciplines. Fellows will benefit from training using techniques typically isolated to single disciplines, combined with a program of transferable skills that will prepare them for future employment.
